Can We Coexist?

I'm sure you've seen the "Coexist" bumper sticker. Each letter of the word is comprised of a religious, peaceful or egalitarian symbol. Typically, it's on the car of an idealistic, well-meaning liberal. As a libertarian who's for anything that's peaceful and voluntary, I think it's a nice aspiration. It would be great if we could continue to do that as we generally have since America was founded.

However, in recent weeks and months, I have come to realize that one of the symbols above (at least the radical version of it) is not like the others (not even close), for many reasons. When that is combined with (1) its geometric growth rate, which is enhanced by (2) (ironically) the toleration and even subsidization of it by nonmembers, it poses the greatest existential threat to the West since the Cold War.

It seems like suddenly (especially after this week's elections, when two [nearly three] of its members were elected to high offices, joining four who are already there), some Americans are waking up to this rapidly increasing danger. Some have been warning about this risk for decades, but now there are many videos circulating on X of different leaders unabashedly talking about their plans to conquer America from within. It's an ingenious and pernicious strategy that exploits the West's current fetish of suicidal empathy.

As I've come to realize that sooner rather than later, America will be in an inescapable "checkmate" position, I've increasingly been filled with a sense of dread that is heavier and darker than anything I've ever felt before, as this could destroy my country (it's already in the process of wrecking Western Europe).

I've never been much interested in this group (only a handful of the ~3,400 books I own are about it), so I still have much to learn about it before I write more on this subject. But if you want to be prepared for a demographic, cultural, religious and political change that may well radically transform America into something that is unrecognizable (as it already has done in some places), let this be a warning to you. Stop watching spectator sports, get on X (and other platforms that are friendly to free speech) and find out what's happening.

As Cardinal Sarah recently observed, the barbarians are already inside the gates, so you have less time than you think to prepare for developments that I think will inevitably lead to either confrontation or subjugation.
